The effect of morphine on the conditioned reflex of the motor activity (head-turning) was studied in rats with the implanted electrodes in the nucleus accumbens. The results obtained indicate that the rewarding effect of a conditioned stimulus does not depend on the opioid receptors of the nucleus accumbens, since the blocking of these receptors by morphine did not influence the development of conditioned reflex. It is also supposed that central opioid systems have no effect on the development of the "positive" instrumental conditioned reflex.//
