I have an array of objects, say: var objects = [{ objectA: 1, objectB: "stringA", objectC: "stringC" }, { objectA: 1, objectB: "stringB", objectC: "stringC" }] I then have an array of objects, say: var objects2 = [{ objectA: 1, objectB: "stringA" }, { objectA: 1, objectB: "stringB" }] I want to make a recursive function, which takes the above two arrays and returns the following: [{ objectA: 1, objectB: "stringA", objectC: "stringC" }, { objectA: 1, objectB: "stringB", objectC: "stringC" }] The idea is that it will recursively find the objects from objects2 that exist in objects. So, for instance, the function would iterate over all of the objects in objects and check if any of their properties exist in objects2. For example: for (var i = 0; i < objects2.length; i++) if (objects2[i].objectA === o.objectA) return true; The iterative solution: var result = objects.filter(function(o) { return objects2.some(function(o2) { return o2.objectA === o.objectA; }); }); Since objects2.some() has O(1) time complexity, both will be O(n) time complexity. Both of the approaches will work for any number of objects. Objective and subjective results of arthroscopic subacromial decompression and acromioplasty for treatment of chronic impingement syndrome.
